A herd of four entered Babarwadi in Hewale from Ker-Morle forest of Dodamarg taluka

A herd of four elephants, including two calves has been found roaming in the forest area near the Tillari Reservoir since last week. Villagers have expressed apprehension as the male tusker was noticed with injuries.

In 2002 a herd of 20 elephants entered Sindhudurg district from the forests of Karnataka-Goa through Maan and Mangeli villages situated on the Maharashtra-Karnataka border. Man-elephant conflict in the vicinity of Tillari region reached to such an extent that it resulted in the

Goa: Fears of man-animal conflict surface again in Tillari as elephant herd spotted

From 2004 to 2008 repeated campaigns were organised by Maharashtra forest department to send elephants back to their natural habitat but it did not prove successful in completely eliminating the man-elephant conflict. Seven elephants remained in Sindhudurg, of which three took refuge in Kendre in the backwater of Tillari reservoir and remaining four moved to the Kudal area of which all four elephants were dead.

Currently a herd of four, with an injured male tusker and a female elephant and the two calves, entered Babarwadi in Hewale from Ker-Morle forest of Dodamarg taluka. Sanket Naik from Maneri, said, "Among the herd of four elephants the tusker is injured and is seen roaming in the forest along with the female elephant and two calves. There is an urgent need of monitoring the movement of these elephants as they may enter into areas of human settlement of the Goa-Maharashtra border. A decade ago elephants from Tillari forest entered into Goa and created havoc in villages of Bicholim, Bardez and Pernem talukas."

Deputy conservator of Sawantwadi forest division, Shahaji Naranvar said, "Recently I had visited Tillari region and I am planning a strategy to monitor the movement of the elephants. I will inform our staff to patrol the area."

held to create awareness on man-animal conflict. Agency has engaged scientists from the Forest College and Research Institute in Mettupalayam to find ways to increase fodder availability for elephants and other herbivores by planting native fodder grasses in lower slopes of Western Ghat.

District forest officer of Coimbatore division D Venkatesh said that the study, 'Identification of Native Fodder Grasses and Developing Mass Multiplication techniques', aims to prevent elephant-human conflict.

The scientists aim to document native fodder grasses and fodder trees in the Coimbatore division. They will also assess the nutritive value of grasses and trees, and standardize mass-multiplication technology for such plants.

As many as 29 native fodder grass species, including summer grass, broom grass and signal grass were documented in Sirumugai forest. Slips of the grasses were collected and raised in a nursery for mass multiplication studies. As many as 14 native fodder tree species were documented. Seeds of giant thorny bamboo (Bambusa bambos) and sacred fig (Ficus religiosa) were collected and were sown in the nursery.

Seedlings of Malabar plum (Syzygium cumini), portia tree (Thespesia populnea), white teak (Gmelina arborea), anjan (Hardwickia binata) and mahuwa (Madhuca latifolia) were planted in the mother garden as fodder bank and also for mass multiplication studies.

Leaf samples and plant parts from 29 grass species and 14 tree species were shade-dried and powdered for characterizing nutritional and anti-nutritional values. The work is in progress.

Tillari region into the forests of Chorla Ghat area. A wildlife enthusiast working for the last two decades in the Mhadei region confirmed, "We got images of this tigress on the camera trap in Chorla Ghat in the summer of 2018 in the morning session."

After around four years, the tigress was camera-trapped on June 30, 2021, in the Mhadei Wildlife Sanctuary.

"We have given this tigress the name of TT7. Through images taken via camera trap technique it had been confirmed that a tigress from the Tillari had moved into the Mhadei sanctuary. On earlier occasions, it has been revealed that tigers are moving from the forests of Maharashtra into the Mhadei and Bhimgad Wildlife sanctuaries of Goa and Karnataka respectively," wildlife activist working in the Tillari region Girish Punjabi told TOI.

Kolhapur forest division chief conservator V Ben Clement said, "The Tillari forests are contiguous to the Mhadei sanctuary and the Bhimgad sanctuary. We will take up joint efforts to protect tigers and monitor their movements with our counterparts."

Presently, the Tillari has the presence of TT2 female tigers and TT8 male tigers whereas the Mhadei forests, besides TT7 tigress, has one male tiger and one female tigress.

"As per the recommendations of the National Tiger Conservation Authority, we have taken various steps and mitigation measures for the tiger conservation and protection," North Goa deputy conservator of forests (wildlife division) Arulraj Jabestin said.

The rally was conducted from Bakk Mundheri town and Kurumbanur village areas.

During the rally, police and forest department officials urged the public and farmers not to chase elephants by using crackers when they come out of the forests and enter farmlands.

Around 40 personnel from the forest department and police took part in the rally.

Mettupalayam forest ranger Palaniraja said whenever elephants come out of the forest and enter agricultural lands, farmers burst crackers to chase away the animals leading to man-animal conflicts. Instead, farmers should inform the forest department. The frontline staff of the department would reach the spot and send back the elephant into the reserve forest.
