What happened?

A forest guard had allegedly warned the victim about the presence of a big cat, but the latter had ignored her warning.

Villagers soon heard a tiger roar and set out into the forest armed with sticks. They spotted the tiger near the victim's body in compartment number 448 of the Goregaon forest range.

Meanwhile, Deputy Conservator of Forest Kulraj Singh has informed that

While the woman was busy collecting firewood, a lurking tiger attacked and killed her.

Following the attack, villagers had protested against the forest officials alleging that despite reporting several sightings and attacks on cattle no actions were taken.

(HWC) is one of the greatest threats to wildlife species.

“The future of coexistence, thus, requires enabling wildlife persistence within human-dominated landscapes while substantially and sustainably reducing risks and costs for people and wildlife. Integrating HWC management with land use planning programs and social and environmental safeguard systems, such as social and environmental impact assessments can decrease negative impacts of development activities,” the report said.
