You must have heard about Bihar's Nalanda district, as the history of this place dates back to the times of Buddha and Mahavira. Dhakni village, located 20 kilometres away from this district, is known for its people. As per reports, this village has no criminal records, there is no alcohol found or made in the village, there are no political rivalries, and there is no caste discrimination. There are around 150 to 200 houses in the village. The villagers voluntarily choose a member and elect them to be their panchayat. Dhakni village comes under Ward No. 2 of Gangura panchayat, and the area is around 5,000 square feet. According to a local named Surendra Singh, an environmentalist laid down certain rules around 40 to 45 years ago, and people still follow these. Another interesting fact is that 85% of residents here are educated.

The villagers are happy to live here and enjoy their moments with nature. There is a garden that was inaugurated by Surendra Singh; it covers 3 acres of land. It has now become a must-visit place in Dhakni. The villagers don't believe in the concept of class or status; they feel happy to help anyone in need.

On the other hand, the village is known for its zero criminal record. To date, Dhakni has not seen any police cases, even during elections. As per reports, 85% of the villagers are educated and are currently working in different departments. Children are sent to school and are encouraged to study and build their own careers.

The garden in the village is also a source of several Ayurvedic plants. The villagers also collect different kinds of fruits from the garden. The locals have created friendly relations with other neighbouring villages as well.

Dhakni village is becoming the model village of Bihar. It has created history by not having any criminal offence for the last 45 years, and the villagers stay here like a single family, without any discrimination.
