For several decades people have been using the mangroves as firewood which would be detrimental to their own safety, the chairman said. He pointed out that several areas on seashore in East Godavari withstood the onslaught of 1996 cyclone because of the mangroves.

District collector Jawahar Reddy said mangrove forests were spread in about 35,000 hectares in the district out of 55,000 hectares along the cost in the state. He said places like Balusuthippa and Bhiravapalem were affected by cyclone because of the erosion of mangrove forest in these areas. Stressing the importance of safeguarding the mangrove for the security of seashore areas, he said alternative income generation schemes were being implemented in the fishermen areas under Velugu project. Executive director of the Foundation P C Kesavan said the population growth at the seashore areas need to be taken into account to further enrich the mangrove to maintain ecological balance.
