

Back in Business

A duck is seen preying on a fish in the Ulsoor lake on Tuesday, a welcome sight from what it was earlier this month when hundreds of fish died due to pollution. The 123-acre lake was low on oxygen killing the fish, thanks to sewage flowing into it. "After the mass death of fish, ducks were let into the lake to improve its condition. Ducks help aeration of the lake and this is a conventional method of managing ponds in villages," said TV Ramachandra from the IISc Centre for Ecological Sciences. — N NARASIMHA MURTHY