

Now, KSIIDC wants to be nodal agency to develop Bellandur lake

Eighteen-member expert panel finds “too many parastatal agencies and lack of coordination”

Is this a case of too many agencies wanting a slice of the lucrative pie?

As the froth in Bellandur and Varthur lakes evoke shock and disgust from citizens, an 18-member expert committee formed to chalk out a solution had noticed that there were “too many parastatal agencies and lack of coordination”.

Though the committee report sought to regulate the work of eight government departments to handle the lake, one more agency wants to throw its hat in the ring. Armed with a proposal from a British company, the Karnataka State
